

Mpact takes their factories online

4 Oct 2017

Following the successful launch of a series of online production DVDs in 2013, Mpact Plastics has developed the second generation of DVDs to help educate a vast target audience.

The DVDs, originally launched on YouTube and on the Mpact website, have gained popularity across websites and have been viewed thousands of times by customers, suppliers, technology partners and students, and the general market, all of whom have benefitted from learning about the four major technologies used to produce most of the rigid plastic products that are being utilised in our households on a daily basis. It is now also available on Bizcommunity, Plastixportal and packaging portals.

This virtual factory tour experience has especially been beneficial to customers who do not have the opportunity to visit the Mpact factories in which their branded products are produced. The initiative was launched as an attempt to “bring the factories to the office people”, thereby aiding in their understanding of the manufacturing process. This was done to widen their frame of reference and successfully work with Mpact Plastics to offer consumers the best possible products. Furthermore, it has facilitated effective and joint product development efforts between Mpact and our customers.

These DVDs are just one example of how Mpact Plastics promotes business relationships and undertakes initiatives that offer maximum benefits to our customers.
