Ornico, the Brand Intelligence® firm, has increased its African footprint by establishing new partnerships on the continent with the addition of media intelligence services from Cameroon, Gabon, Rwanda, Congo Brazzaville and the Democratic Republic of Congo. Previously focusing on predominantly English-speaking markets in Africa, these additional countries will now add several French-speaking markets, allowing brands to gain even more insights from media sources across the continent.

Combining smart technologies with human analytical insight, Ornico now enables advertisers and marketers to take a standardised approach to media and Brand Intelligence® across the continent. This will enable brands to harmonise and better understand African media consumer habits, practices and brand performance across eighteen major markets which will in-turn lead to better advertising and marketing investments.

Oresti Patricios, CEO of OrnicoGroup, believes it is critical to measure and evaluate brand performance across a wide range of disciplines. “The proliferation of media has created an avalanche of noise – advertising, social media posts, news commentary, entertainment, etc. Consumers do not just see your brand but also your competitors and many other issues also vie for their attention. Measuring your strategies and tactics and adapting where required is critical, particularly in the African space.”

With the recent Russia-Africa Summit held in October and the Bank of America reporting that Africa will become the land of opportunity for investors should the US and China trade war ease, it is clear that there is great interest across the globe to tap into the massive opportunities that Africa presents.

The need for insights and intelligence gained from media channels on the continent is hence becoming critical for brands wanting to monitor developments and opportunities.
