Broadband network for Mother City

IOL Technology reports that the City of Cape Town is planning to spend R400 million setting up its own broadband network by 2010 so that it can bypass Telkom, saving money, and improving services and increasing revenue by offering Internet and telephone services to the private sector. For more, click here.

For more, visit: https://www.bizcommunity.com