

Le Meridien Fisherman's Cove unlocks the sea for visitors

To help curious travellers experience and explore the Seychelles and ignite their inspiration with an incredible underwater encounter, Le Meridien Fisherman's Cove have launched "Unlock the Sea." Created in partnership with the Marine Conservation Society Seychelles, this unique, interactive programme helps guests discover a treasure trove of marine life around the island through a curated snorkeling experience and learn and educate themselves on the importance of marine conservation.

Marine experts from The Marine Conservation Society will guide the guest journey through five underwater zones

Guests can also witness an underwater art gallery or post a postcard to friends or family from under water.

"Today's travellers are looking for active adventure and new ways of experiencing a destination. Seychelles, with its pristine white sands lapped by topaz waters, coral sunsets, and enchanting underwater sites provides all this and more," said Romain Chanut, general manager Le Meridien Fisherman's Cove, Seychelles. "Drawing inspiration from the brand's commitment to helping travellers unlock destinations through the Filters of Discovery - Coordinates, Culture, and Cuisine, we hope this initiative will help us create an enriching guest experience."

Marine experts from the Marine Conservation Society will guide the guest journey through five underwater zones. This includes the Welcome zone which is the seagrass bed, the Coral Village which houses the dramatic and beautiful coral reefs, Blue or the open waters, the Reef Town where the reef elevates from the sandy bottom towards the rocks and the Fish Ville, the untouched and preserved area. Through these zones not only can guests see a variety of fish but also gain insights into the ecosystem and how we can preserve it.

What is more, while unravelling the mysteries of the underwater world, guests can get a glimpse of an underwater art gallery curated as part of the Arterial Network's Giant Tortoise Art Project, inspired by a number of celebrated street art projects in major cities across the world. Painted by celebrated artists from Seychelles, the Giant Tortoise Art Project is a showcase of the local art scene on the Island and underpins the fragility of the ecosystem in the face of global warming and rising sea levels.

Proceeds from the donations collected through the programme will go to sustain the marine conservation projects led by The Marine Conservation Society Seychelles.
