

Former staff threatening to sue Ndalo Media over retrenchment packages

#NEWSWATCH: Some of Ndalo Media's former staff members are taking legal action against the defunct publisher. They claim that they haven't received retrenchment packages as promised.

Ndalo Media belongs to Khanyi Dhlomo and was liquidated earlier this year in January.

Ndalo Media no more, come 2019

13 Dec 2018

According to The Media Online, along with labour lawyer Thapelo Kharametsane, advocates Nazeer Cassim and Teneille Govender have taken up the challenge for 45 staff members.

Meanwhile, former editor of Destiny Man, Kojo Baffoe, posted a statement on behalf of the affected staff. Following news that The Bar Group had bought the Destiny and Destiny Man titles, two new issues are expected to be on newsstands this week.

He said in a tweet that he had received messages to find out whether he was involved in the relaunch of the Destiny Man magazine. "I am not. For my peace of mind, I have moved on. My former colleagues are still carrying the fight to get our former employer to pay settlements."

“ I have been receiving messages to find out whether I am involved in relaunch of Destiny Man magazine. I am not. For my peace of mind, I have moved on. My former colleagues are still carrying the fight to get our former employer to pay settlements. A statement pic.twitter.com/JTsbJYa8nw— Kojo Baffoe (@kojobaffoe) October 28, 2019 ”

Read more here:

Former Ndalo Media staff suing for promised retrenchment packages - The Media Online

Destiny magazine relaunches while former employees remain in the dark - News24

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>